

Religious Persecution in Massachusetts.

Mrs. Louise Imogene Guiney, the poetess of Auburn, Mass., is a very charming woman, and her poetry is very popular.

Yet Miss Guiney's talent and winsome personality have not shielded her from persecution. It seems that the members of the American Protective Association are very strong in Auburn, and they have started a boycott against the poetess on the ground that she is a Catholic. They refuse to buy stamps at her office, and have almost entirely cut off the revenue upon which she depends for a support.

Miss Guiney has very little to say about the matter, but her friends are indignant, and in a recent interview Professor Arlo Bates said to a New York reporter:

"There has never before come to my personal knowledge any instance of persecution so intolerant, so outrageous, so utterly without shadow of justification as the boycotting of Miss Guiney by the American Protective Association. A lady of highest character, of rich and unusual gifts, of perfect official rectitude, the daughter of a brave and patriotic officer in the union army, is being hounded out of her means of livelihood by a company of narrow-minded and violent fanatics simply on account of her religious faith. The thing would be incredible were it not actual. It is an instance of bigotry worthy only of the darkest of dark ages, and I have not words strong enough to express my indignation and my righteous anger. If there is not in Massachusetts enough love of fair play and respect for tolerance and honesty to prevent the American Protective Association from thus riding down all justice and decency, it is high time that we acknowledged our civilization and ethics a practical failure.

It is an outrageous case, and the proper presentation of it to the public should arouse a sentiment against the American Protective Association that will cause all respectable citizens to condemn its methods and do everything in their power to wipe it from the face of the earth.—Atlanta Constitution.
